- Senior Engineer, Ministry of the Environment, Conservation and Parks
- Bachelor of Applied Science, Chemical Engineering, Queen's University

Transformational change is required to ensure that PEO continues to be a modern and relevant self regulator. Self-regulation is a right, not a privilege, and as engineers, we must agree to put the public interest ahead of our own. Recent events in BC and Quebec show that engineers are not immune to threats to our self-regulatory status.

The PEO Council that I currently serve on took the bold step to conduct a regulatory review. As an out of the box thinker and complex problem solver, I would like to continue to provide direction and oversight related to the review recommendations for right-touch regulation, including:

- Governance improvements;
- Fiscal accountability;
- Improved transparency, removal of bias, and flexible processes that will allow for the rapidly changing practice of engineering in our licensing;
- Continued work as a co-regulator with other ministries;
- Focus on enforcement, complaints, discipline, and
- Ensuring the development of guidelines and practice standards relevant to ever-changing engineering practice.

Change must be made through stakeholder engagement with members and the public, with the use of evidence to develop better policy that is reflective of our diverse and changing profession.

- I have extensive experience working in engineering roles in both the public and private sector.
- I am honoured to have held numerous volunteer roles within PEO and OSPE, including serving as Legislation Committee Chair, and as a member of Complaints Committee, Professional Standards Committee, Regional Councillors Committee, along with being a long -time volunteer with the Mississauga Chapter.

I urge you to vote for me in this important election to ensure PEO continues to transition to a modern regulator that considers the public interest as paramount.
